

Mouse Facts

- Mice are very clean and organized. They like to keep things tidy in their enclosure.
- Mice are nocturnal which means they sleep during the day and are active at night.
- Female mice are called does and male mice are called bucks. Baby mice are either called pinkies or pups.
- Mice are talented climbers and swimmers. They can jump up to almost 18 inches.
- Mice communicate with each other using ultrasonic sounds that humans can't hear.
- Mice are incredibly intelligent creatures. They have great memories and have even shown that they can recognize their names.
- Mice can give birth to litters of around 5–10 babies.
- Mice are social creatures and can get lonely if housed by themselves. It is best to keep mice in pairs. It is more likely for male mice to fight but it's still important to keep same sex pairs, so be sure to keep an eye on male mice pairs.
- Mice in captivity generally live to be 2–3 years old.
- Their tails typically grow to the length of their body. This helps with climbing and keeping them stable on their feet.
